

Wildwood Zoo Welcomes Two New Aoudad Ewes and Announces a Surprising Discovery

News from the City of Marshfield

Wildwood Park & Zoo is excited to announce the arrival of two new aoudad ewes, both captive-born at another accredited Wisconsin zoo. The young females (Ember and Ash) were selected for their docile temperaments, strong health, and reproductive soundness and have now been successfully introduced to Wildwood's existing aoudad group.

exceptionally feral when they first arrived and were extremely difficult for staff to safely handle. Because of their temperament, veterinary procedures had to be conducted quickly and carefully with animal and staff safety as the priority.

After nearly a year of observation and continued familiarity with the animals, staff recently determined that one of the animals originally identified as an ewe particularly good news.

With Atlas now confirmed as a ram and three females making up the herd, Wildwood Zoo has the beginnings of a potential breeding group. If breeding occurs as expected, the Zoo could welcome its first aoudad lambs as early as March or April.

Aoudads, also known as Barbary sheep, are native to the mountainous regions of North Africa. They were introduced into the United States in the early 1900s and subsequently established populations in several parts of the country, particularly in the southwestern United States. Their ability to thrive in rugged, dry environments has made them an interesting and resilient species for zoological collections.

The two new ewes are settling in well and have been observed spending time with the residents' animals. The group is already beginning to move together throughout the habitat, with the new arrivals frequently staying close to the established animals and showing encouraging signs of forming a cohesive herd.

The addition comes with an unexpected development involving one of Wildwood's original aoudads.

When the original group arrived approximately a year ago, all of the animals were believed to be female. Visitors who followed the herd may remember that the animals were

is, in fact, a ram.

Acadia is actually Atlas!

While it may seem surprising, misidentification of sex can occur with animals that have limited interaction with human caregivers, particularly when they are newly acquired, extremely flighty, or difficult to safely handle. As the aoudads have become more established at Wildwood and staff has been able to observe their behavior and physical characteristics over time, the mystery surrounding Atlas's identity was finally solved.

And in this case, the discovery is

"We couldn't have planned this any better," said Kyle Kirk, Zoo Manager. "What we thought was a group of females has turned out to include a ram, and now we've added two carefully selected females. Watching these animals go from extremely difficult to handle to beginning to function as a herd has been incredibly rewarding. And if everything goes as we hope, we may have some very exciting little additions to introduce to the community next spring."

For Wildwood, the growing herd provides an opportunity to educate visitors about a species with an unusual history in North America, while potentially allowing guests to experience the natural social dynamics and reproduction of aoudads firsthand.

Mid-State celebrates Manufacturing Month with $5 Million investment in central Wisconsin workforce

STEVENS POINT, Wis. – Mid-State Technical College is celebrating Manufacturing Month this October with new opportunities for regional manufacturers, their employees and students, led by a $5 million federal investment that will provide eligible manufacturers with free workforce training and technical assistance.

Mid-State was recently awarded a $5 million grant from the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) through its Manufacturing in America Empower to Grow (E2G) initiative. One of just 11 organizations nationwide selected, Mid-State will use the 12-month grant to launch USA MADE: Upskilling and Strengthening America's Manufacturing Advancement and Development Ecosystem, an initiative designed to strengthen central Wisconsin's manufacturing workforce and improve small-business competitiveness.

USA MADE is focused on helping participating manufacturers upskill their existing workforce. Through the initiative, Mid-State plans to support 20 manufacturing businesses and train at least 150 incumbent workers, with a goal of helping participants earn 75 industry-recognized credentials. Training will be offered tuition- and fee-free to eligible employees of participating manufacturers, with qualifying certification application or exam costs also covered.

Training opportunities will be organized around five certificate areas designed to address needs across the manufacturing operation: Manufacturing Foundations & Workplace Readiness; Quality Systems, Compliance & Inspection; Manufacturing Engineering & Process Improvement; Digital Manufacturing & Supply Chain Excellence; and Workforce Leadership & Organizational Development.

"Manufacturing has long been essential to the strength of central Wisconsin, and this $5 million investment gives Mid-State an important opportunity to support the people and businesses driving that industry today," said Dr. Shelly Mondeik, president of Mid-State Technical College. "By helping manufacturers invest in their incumbent workforce, we can expand access to industry-relevant training, strengthen the skills of current employees and help regional employers remain competitive in a rapidly changing manufacturing environment."

"Under President Trump and Administrator Loeffler's leadership, the SBA is rebuilding America's industrial base one community at a time, and Mid-State Technical College is leading that charge in central Wisconsin," said Lisa Shimkat, SBA Associate Administrator for Field Operations. "This Manufacturing in America Empower to Grow initiative will help local manufacturers develop the skilled workforce they need to grow their operations and meet the demands of a rapidly expanding manufacturing industry."

An important first step will be listening directly to employers. Regional manufacturers will be invited to an employer listening session Tuesday, Oct. 13, from 8 to 10 a.m.

at Mid-State's Wayne H. Bushman Advanced Manufacturing, Engineering Technology, and Apprenticeship (AMETA®) Center in Stevens Point. Employer feedback will help inform training and technical assistance offered through USA MADE. Additional details and invitations will be shared directly with regional manufacturers.

"The most important thing we can do is start by listening to our manufacturers," said Ryan Kawski, dean of Mid-State's School of Applied Technology. "We want employers to tell us where they are seeing skills gaps, operational challenges and opportunities for growth. The USA MADE grant gives us resources to respond with practical, customized training and technical assistance that can make a difference on the shop floor."

Beyond the workforce training supported through USA MADE, Mid-State is also using Manufacturing Month to introduce the next generation to manufacturing, engineering and technology careers. In partnership with Engineering Tomorrow, the College will host two hands-on experiences expected to serve approximately 120 students in grades 8–12. The Oct. 29 Bridges Lab will give students experience with engineering and bridge design, followed by a Nov. 2 Packaging Lab focused on packaging engineering and design.

Community members and prospective students can also explore modern manufacturing firsthand through dedicated tours of Mid-State's AMETA Center. The 48,000-square-foot Stevens Point facility features specialized labs and equipment supporting automation, robotics, welding, machining, manufacturing operations and mechanical design.

Weinbrenner Shoe Company Project Receives State Economic Development Award

A major Marshfield economic development project has received statewide recognition.

The Wisconsin Economic Development Association has named the Weinbrenner Shoe Company retention project the winner of the 2026 Community and Economic Development Award in the Business Retention and Expansion category.

The award recognizes projects in which a community successfully works to retain or expand an existing business that is important to the local economy.

The project brought together the City of Marshfield, Weinbrenner Shoe Company, Ellis Construction, the Wisconsin Economic Development Corporation and regional partners to support a $14.5 million investment in a new 70,000-square-foot facility at Mill Creek Business Park.

The new facility retains approximately 120 local jobs and creates capacity for 35 additional positions, while also improving workflow, safety, technology and employee well-being. The project also strengthens Marshfield's tax base and creates future redevelopment opportunities at Weinbrenner's former downtown site.

Weinbrenner has been part of Marshfield's manufacturing community for nearly 90 years. City Administrator Steve Barg congratulated the company and noted its continued commitment to manufacturing high-quality footwear and providing employment in Marshfield.

The award was presented September 17 during WEDA's annual CEDA Awards ceremony in Kenosha.

Wildwood Park & Zoo Welcomes Two Long-Awaited Cougar Cubs

MARSHFIELD, Wis. — Wildwood Park & Zoo has welcomed two new cougar cubs, an unrelated young male and a young female, who will become the newest animal ambassadors at the City of Marshfield's zoo. Both are around three months old and still very reliant on their support staff.

The cubs arrived last week from a Wisconsin-based captive breeding facility and are settling into their new home. Both are eating well, playing with enrichment items and becoming increasingly comfortable with their surroundings.

While the community is understandably excited to meet Wildwood's newest residents, zoo staff are asking visitors for a little patience.

The zoo's Welcome Center is temporarily closed to provide the cubs with a quiet environment during their initial acclimation period. Over the coming weeks, animal care staff will gradually introduce them to new sights, sounds, and people before allowing them to begin exploring their outdoor habitat.

Once the cubs are introduced to the exhibit, visitors are encouraged to approach quietly and allow the animals to become comfortable with their new surroundings at their own pace. While the cubs don't have public names yet, that won't be the case for long. Wildwood Park & Zoo will soon announce a community naming contest.

Continuing the Legacy of Star and Thunder

The arrival of the cubs begins a new chapter in a long history of cougars at Wildwood Park & Zoo.

Many longtime visitors will remember Star and Thunder, the brother-and-sister pair that arrived at Wildwood in 2008. In 2019, the pair moved into an expanded cougar exhibit featuring additional space, natural surfaces and greater opportunities for animal enrichment and public viewing.

Thunder died in February 2024 at nearly 16 years old. Star remained at Wildwood until her death in April 2026 at age 17, just months short of her 18th birthday. During their many years at Wildwood, Star and Thunder became favorites of visitors and staff and helped introduce generations of families to one of North America’s most impressive native predators.

The two new cubs will continue that legacy while giving visitors the unique opportunity to watch them grow, mature, and develop over the coming years.

Why Cougars Live at Wildwood Park & Zoo

Cougars (Puma concolor), also commonly called mountain lions or pumas, are wild animals. The two new Wildwood cubs, however, were born under human care and were not raised by a wild mother to survive independently. They are not candidates for release into the wild.

In nature, young cougars remain with their mother for an extended period while learning essential survival behaviors, including hunting, navigating large territories, identifying threats, and avoiding people. Those are learned behaviors that cannot simply be recreated by placing a captive-born animal into a natural environment.

Releasing an animal that has spent its life in human care would not necessarily give it a better life. Without the necessary survival skills and natural avoidance of people, release could place both the animal and the public at risk.

At Wildwood, the cubs will instead have a permanent home where they will receive appropriate nutrition, veterinary care, enrichment, shelter and daily care from trained staff. They can live out their lives while also serving an important educational purpose.

For thousands of visitors, particularly children, seeing a cougar up close can create a connection to wildlife that photographs and videos cannot fully duplicate. The animals provide opportunities to teach visitors about predator-prey relationships, habitat, wildlife biology, conservation, and how people can responsibly coexist with native wildlife.

Wildwood’s role is therefore twofold: to provide lifelong, professional care for animals that depend upon humans while giving those animals an important role in educating future generations about wildlife and conservation.

A Native Wisconsin Species

Cougars are native to Wisconsin and historically occurred throughout the state. Wild cougars disappeared from Wisconsin by approximately 1910. Today, confirmed cougars occasionally travel through Wisconsin, but the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources says there is currently no evidence of a breeding population in the state. The animals documented here are believed to be primarily transient males dispersing from western populations, particularly from the Black Hills of South Dakota.

There are indications, however, that the species’ presence in portions of the Upper Midwest is changing. In Michigan’s Upper Peninsula, two wild cougar kittens were documented in 2025—the first verified reproduction in Michigan in more than a century. Later photographs confirmed the two juveniles traveling with an adult female.

In spring 2026, trail cameras in northern Minnesota documented a female cougar with three kittens, providing the first confirmed evidence of wild cougar reproduction in Minnesota in more than 100 years. Minnesota wildlife officials cautioned that the discovery does not yet establish a self-sustaining breeding population, but it represents a significant development for the species in the Upper Midwest.

Wisconsin continues to receive occasional verified sightings as well. Most recently, the Wisconsin DNR verified a cougar captured on a trail camera in southern Lincoln County on August 12, 2026.

About Cougars

Cougars are the largest wildcat native to Wisconsin and one of North America’s largest native cats. According to the Wisconsin DNR, adult males typically weigh 116 to 160 pounds, while adult females generally weigh 75 to 110 pounds. An adult cougar can measure more than 7 feet from nose to the end of its long tail.

Young cougars have distinctive spots that help provide camouflage. Those markings gradually disappear as the animal matures, leaving the tawny coat associated with an adult cougar.

Despite their size and strength, cougars are generally secretive and solitary animals. They are ambush predators, and white-tailed deer are an important natural prey species. In the wild, cougars occupy large territories and generally avoid people.

Unlike African lions, cougars cannot roar. They communicate through a range of vocalizations, including purrs, chirps, growls, hisses, and distinctive high-pitched calls.

Cougars typically live longer under professional human care than in the wild, where they must contend with injury, disease, competition, food availability, and other natural risks. Star and Thunder’s long lives at Wildwood are examples of longevity that is possible with professional care.

A New Generation at Wildwood Zoo staff will continue to closely monitor the cubs as they become accustomed to their new environment. Even after the outdoor habitat opens, visitors should remember that the animals will be able to choose where they spend their time. At times, they may choose to remain inside or in less visible areas to visitors.

The addition of the young cougars supports Wildwood Park & Zoo's mission of connecting people with wildlife through education, recreation, and conservation. They will provide an opportunity to learn not only about cougar biology and behavior, but also about the species' history in Wisconsin and its changing presence across the Upper Midwest.

The City of Marshfield Parks and Recreation Department looks forward to introducing the cubs to the community in the coming weeks.

And stay tuned; the Wildwood Park & Zoo cougar cub naming contest is coming soon!

October is National Pedestrian Safety Month

October is National Pedestrian Safety Month, a reminder that safe streets are important for everyone who walks, rolls, or crosses a roadway. Pedestrian safety is especially important for people who do not drive, including children, older adults, and people who are blind or have low vision.

Drivers should stay alert, watch for pedestrians at intersections and crosswalks, slow down in areas with foot traffic, and avoid distractions. Pedestrians should use sidewalks and marked crossings when available, remain visible, and pay attention when crossing streets.

Safe pedestrian travel also depends on well-designed streets, sidewalks, crossings, and accessible features that help people move through the community safely.

Your Health Matters Discusses Mental Health During and After Pregnancy

By David Murchland - Marshfield Now!

The emotional changes that come with pregnancy and a new baby are the focus of a new episode of Your Health Matters

Shah directs the Perinatal Mental Health Clinic at Marshfield Clinic, where Dupee serves as RN coordinator. Kibbel opens the discussion by acknowledging a concern many women share: They may be struggling, but are unsure whether what they are feeling is a normal part of pregnancy or new parenthood—and whether it is time to ask for help.

“The way to distinguish may not be easy for the individual,” Shah says. “The best thing to do is always reach out and ask, ‘Is this normal?’”

Understanding the baby blues

Shah explains that the first days after delivery can bring major shifts in mood. A mother may feel happy one moment and tearful the next while recovering from labor, getting little sleep and adjusting to hormonal changes. She describes these temporary feelings as the postpartum blues.

The guests discuss how depression can look different. Shah points to signs such as feeling detached from the baby, with Sanford Health - Marshfield Clinic. Host Laura Kibbel welcomes psychiatrist Dr. Alpa Shah and registered nurse Lindsey Dupee for a conversation about depression, anxiety and the support available to women before, during and after pregnancy.

losing interest in caring for the baby or feeling hopeless. She cautions against expecting every mother to feel like the glowing, joyful parent often shown in photographs and advertisements. When a woman is uncertain about her symptoms, Shah encourages her to talk with a health care professional rather than try to make the distinction alone.

Shah's interest in this work began during her obstetrics training in India. She recalls patients experiencing serious mental health symptoms after childbirth and not knowing at the time how best to help them. She later trained in psychiatry in Cleveland and completed a fellowship in women's mental health in Chicago before coming to Marshfield.

Treatment is a conversation

Kibbel also raises a question that can be especially difficult during pregnancy: What if a woman needs medication but worries about its effect on her baby?

Shah says the discussion starts by recognizing depression and anxiety as medical conditions that can occur during pregnancy. A care team must consider the condition itself, how severe the symptoms are, and the possible effects of both treatment and leaving the condition untreated. Medication may be appropriate for some patients, she explains, while psychotherapy is another treatment option.

"It's a thoughtful conversation," Shah says. The answers depend on the person, her health history and where she is in her pregnancy or postpartum recovery.

That conversation can begin before a pregnancy. Shah says a woman who is planning to become pregnant and already has a mental health condition can discuss her treatment and medication questions in advance. The clinic also sees women during pregnancy and after delivery.

A first point of contact

Dupee describes her role as a connection between patients, providers and the rest of the health care team. She is often the first person a patient speaks with, and she takes time to learn what the patient is experiencing, where she needs help and what her goals are.

"It can be so vulnerable reaching out for help," Dupee says. She wants that first conversation to feel as comfortable as possible.

The guests also address a fear that admitting to troubling feelings might mean being separated from a baby. Dupee says the team's goal is to support the mother and baby while making sure everyone is safe. Shah says getting treatment can help families address symptoms before they grow more serious.

Women may be referred through an obstetric, primary care or pediatric appointment, and Dupee says they can also call the clinic directly. The direct line is 715-387-5744.

Kibbel closes with a reminder to anyone facing these concerns: "This is not a journey you need to go on alone."

If someone is in immediate danger, call 911 or go to the nearest emergency department. For a mental health crisis, call or text 988.

Former Mayor Lois TeStrake Shares Her Father's Story on Heroes from Home

By David Murchland - Marshfield Now!

MARSHFIELD, Wis. — Former Marshfield Mayor Lois TeStrake joins host Tom Buttke for a new episode of Heroes from Home, sharing memories of her father's World War II service and the lasting role veterans played in her family's life.

TeStrake's father was drafted into the U.S. Navy and served in the South China Sea from 1945 to 1946. He worked as a mess cook aboard a ship with about 300 sailors, helping prepare and serve three meals a day in a small kitchen.

For TeStrake, his story illustrates why every military job matters. "If you didn't have food for a day or two," she asks during the interview, would anyone call the person preparing it "just" a cook?

His enjoyment of cooking continued after he returned home. TeStrake remembers him making breakfast for her and her sisters before leaving for his milk delivery route. She says those mornings remain among her clearest childhood memories.

The family's connection to military service extended beyond her father. Several of his brothers also served, leaving their mother to worry about sons in different branches of the armed forces over a number of years. All returned home, TeStrake says, but she believes their service shaped the way they approached life afterward.

Her father became an active member of Stratford VFW Post 6352. As the post grew, her parents worked together at events: her mother cooked and her father tended bar. TeStrake and her four sisters became life members of the VFW Auxiliary, continuing the family's involvement with the organization.

TeStrake also recalls her father taking an Honor Flight to Washington, D.C., at age 87. She says the visit to the World War II Memorial stayed with him. After he returned, he spoke more often about his years in the Navy, a part of his life he had rarely discussed before. He died three years later, at age 90.

Following his death, the family found a small diary he had started while serving. It contained only four days of entries, but TeStrake says even those few pages gave them a glimpse of his daily life aboard the ship.

Throughout the episode, Buttke and TeStrake discuss veterans who feel their contributions were too small to mention. They point to cooks, mechanics and people who handled paperwork as examples of the many roles needed to support others in service.

The conversation also addresses the emotional effects of war on veterans and their families. TeStrake shares the painful story of an uncle who served in Vietnam and later died by suicide. She and Buttke emphasize the importance of listening to veterans and supporting those who struggle with their experiences.

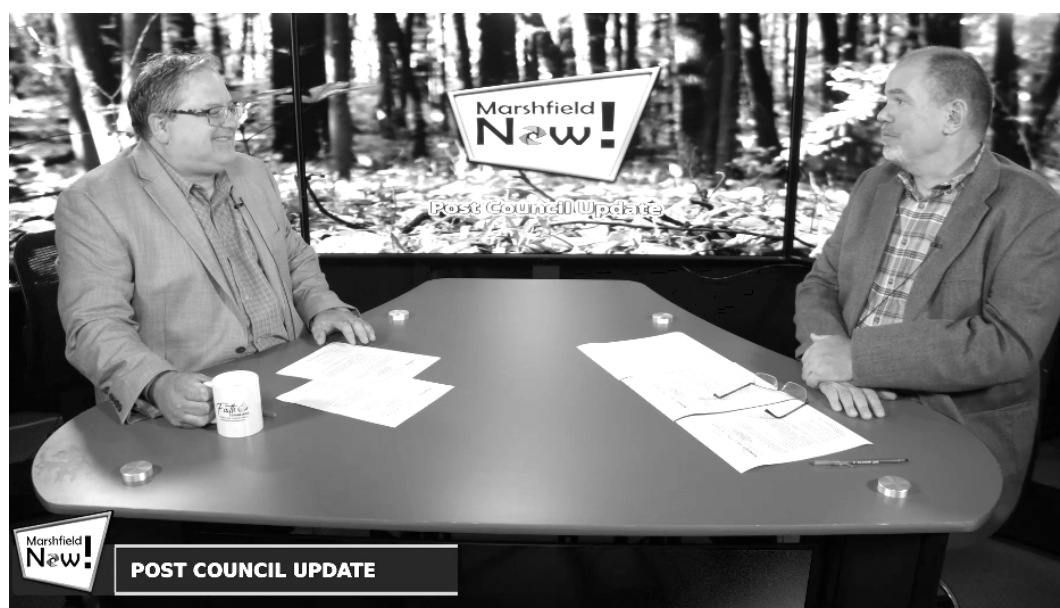

Closer to home, the two discuss Stratford's VFW, local efforts to recognize Purple Heart recipients and the veterans memorial wall at the Marshfield community center. They also talk about how children and families can help keep veterans' stories alive.

TeStrake closes with a simple request: reach out to veterans, thank them when the moment feels welcome and take an interest in their stories. "Be proud of your vets," she says.

The new Heroes from Home episode offers a daughter's view of military service: the work her father did, the family memories he left behind and the community that continued to honor him after he came home.

Marshfield Council Reviews Capital Projects, Advances Camping Ordinance

MARSHFIELD, Wis. — The Marshfield Common Council reviewed the city's proposed five-year Capital Improvement Program on Tuesday, Sept. 22, then took up a proposed ordinance addressing overnight camping on public property during its regular meeting.

In a Post Council Update interview, Council member Scott Koran said the capital plan includes several road projects. Vine Street from Fourth to 14th Street and Fifth Street from Oak to Chestnut are scheduled for 2027. A larger reconstruction of Fourth Street is listed for 2028. Koran said some of the road projects are tied to state grants that cover 80% of eligible costs.

The plan also lists a pavilion, restrooms and playground work at Braem Park for 2027, with parking lot work planned for 2028. Repairs to the tennis courts at Steve J. Miller Recreation Area are scheduled for 2028. The council made no changes to the capital plan at Tuesday's review; projects scheduled in later years may still be adjusted.

At the regular meeting, council members discussed a proposed ordinance that would restrict overnight camping on city property, including streets, parks and rights-of-way. Koran said residents had raised concerns about people staying for extended periods near their homes. Council members also discussed how the measure could affect people experiencing homelessness.

Council member Andrew Riegel proposed a one-year sunset provision that would bring the ordinance back for review. Tuesday's discussion was the ordinance's first reading. It is expected to return for a second reading and a vote at the next council meeting.

The council also authorized a request for proposals for an update to the city's comprehensive plan. The proposals will give the city cost information before it chooses how to proceed. No contract was awarded Tuesday.

In a change to the city's public comment policy, speakers will no longer need to state their street address aloud. The clerk will verify residency, while speakers will state their name and municipality. The policy applies to council meetings and city boards, committees and commissions.

Council members also received an informational presentation on succession planning for senior city leadership. No action was taken on that topic.

SENIOR HARVEST CRANBERRY MARSH TOUR

Join us for a fun morning outing to a local working cranberry marsh! We'll get an up-close look at this unique part of Wisconsin agriculture and enjoy some time outdoors.

Meet at 7:30 a.m. in the parking lot at the Oak Ave. Community Center. We'll take a bus from there and plan to return by approximately 11:30 a.m.

Sign-up online or at the Parks & Recreation Office

We'll be mostly outdoors, so please check the weather and dress accordingly. Since this is a working cranberry marsh, conditions may be wet or muddy. Boots or sturdy, closed-toed shoes are recommended.

Come ready to explore and enjoy a morning at the marsh!

What to Bring:

Check the weather
Snack and/or water

Big smile & curious heart

Boots or closed-toe shoes
